THE SNOW IS BACK

On the heels of this past weekend's nor'easter, another oncoming storm promises to deliver more winter weather. 4

WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT, REPORTER

Are you ready for another storm? Many areas throughout the Northeast are still recovering from the one that hit over the weekend, and forecasters are predicting another on the way. While it's not extremely rare for two nor'easters to hit back-to-back, it isn't something that happens often, a National Weather Service meteorologist said. I talked to him about what to expect when this wintry weather hits Wednesday and how this storm is different from the last. Read more on page 4 and at metro.us.

HARVARD PROF FACES CLAIMS OF MISCONDUCT

1 A Harvard University professor has been placed on leave following sexual misconduct allegations by more than a dozen women. Jorge Dominguez, a Harvard Faculty of Arts and Sciences government professor, was put on administrative leave on Sunday, the Harvard Crimson reported. The move comes just days after a Chronicle of Higher Education report detailed stories of sexual harassment by Dominguez toward Harvard faculty and students. These instances, according to the women's reports, spanned nearly 40 years. Since that article, more women have spoken out. The Chronicle has put the total at 18 women alleging inappropriate behavior by Dominguez. In reports by the Chronicle, multiple women said that Dominguez made them uncomfortable by touching them inappropriately and repeatedly trying to kiss them. KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

EX-TRUMP AIDE SAYS HE WILL REFUSE SUBPOENA

2 Sam Nunberg, a former political aide to President Donald Trump, said on Monday he would refuse to comply with a subpoena to testify before a grand jury in special counsel Robert Mueller's investigation of Russian meddling in the 2016 election. "I'm not going to cooperate," Nunberg told MSNBC. "Why do I have to spend 80 hours going over my emails" with former Trump adviser Steve Bannon and Trump associate Roger Stone. Mueller has charged several Trump associates and more than a dozen Russians in connection to his investigation. Nunberg, in a phone call to MSNBC, said a subpoena to appear before a grand jury was "absolutely ridiculous." Nunberg rejected that Trump had colluded with Russia. "It is the biggest joke to ever think that Donald Trump colluded with the Russians," said Nunberg, who also spoke to the Washington Post and CNN.

JUDGE ORDERS 'PHARMA BRO' TO GIVE UP $7.36M

4 Former drug company executive Martin Shkreli may have to give up a Picasso and a one-of-a-kind Wu-Tang Clan album after a U.S. judge on Monday ordered him to forfeit $7.36 million following his conviction of defrauding investors. U.S. District Judge Kiyo Matsumoto in Brooklyn said the assets Shkreli could forfeit to satisfy the judgment also include $5 million in a brokerage account and his stake in Vyera Pharmaceuticals, one of the drug companies he founded. Shkreli is scheduled to be sentenced for securities fraud on Friday. Shkreli, 34, has been in jail since September, when Matsumoto revoked his bail after he offered a $5,000 bounty for a strand of Hillary Clinton's hair in a Facebook post. Shkreli became notorious as the "Pharma Bro" when he raised the price of anti-parasitic drug Daraprim by over 5,000 percent in 2015.

GOP SENATOR CALLS FOR HEARING ON TARIFFS

5 The Senate should hold hearings on President Donald Trump's proposed tariffs on foreign steel and aluminum, No. 2 Republican Sen. John Cornyn said on Monday. Noting that Trump was "pretty determined" to finalize the tariffs, Cornyn said he would meet with Senate Finance Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch to discuss the possibility of setting up a hearing. "I do think it would be appropriate for Congress to have hearings and listen to the experts and become a little bit better informed about this," Cornyn said, adding: "Clearly the president is listening to some people who have some ideas about trade that many of us don't share." President Donald Trump on Monday said he would not back down from his planned new tariffs on steel and aluminum imports, creating a possible standoff with top lawmakers from his own Republican party.

TRADE WAR

Following up on his announcement of increased tariffs for steel and aluminum, President Trump tweeted, "Trade wars are good, and easy to win." Do you agree or disagree?

A second nor'easter to hit Boston this week

The region is still recovering from the weekend's storm, and another one is on the way, likely bringing wet, heavy snow and wind — and possibly more power outages — with it.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

As much of the Northeast is still reeling from the weekend's storm, forecasters are predicting another nor'easter to hit this week.

The National Weather Service has issued a winter storm watch for most of New England, including the Boston area. The watch will be in effect early Wednesday morning through Thursday morning.

The storm could bring heavy, wet snow and wind and may drop as much as a foot of it on some parts of Massachusetts.

Boston could get between 6 inches and 8 inches, forecasters predicted. Those areas might see some flurries Tuesday, but the snow is expected to really start coming down Wednesday, beginning in the Boston area around 9 a.m.

The heaviest of the snowfall will happen Wednesday night into Thursday. Though the coastal flooding and high winds won't be as severe as with the last storm, this weather could still be dangerous, forecasters warned.

"Concern with this system is it's March so we are dealing with a heavy, wet snow," forecasters wrote. "This may result in a risk for down tree branches/limbs yielding the potential for additional power outages."

It's not extremely rare for two storms like this to happen back-to-back, said National Weather Service meteorologist Kevin Cadima, but still, it's "not something that happens very often," he said.

There are some differences between the storms. The last storm brought a lot of rain, but the coming storm is expected to be colder, meaning forecasters expect more snow. Because it's still a few days out, that could change.

"This is all track-dependent," Cadima said. "If the track of the storm is further off shore, that'll result in a colder solution and result in more snow in the coastal areas. If it were to track a little further west, there will be a quicker change over to rain, so less snow and [more] heavy rainfall during the late Wednesday through Wednesday nighttime period."

"The winds are going to be fairly strong. ... We could see wind gusts from 45 to 65 mph."

National Weather Service meteorologist Kevin Cadima

Cadima added that another concern with this storm will be the winds.

"The winds are going to be fairly strong. Not as strong as the last one, but along the [Massachusetts] coast, we could see wind gusts from 45 to 65 mph," he said.

Report: Massachusetts ranked second-best state for women

An analysis by personal-finance site WalletHub finds the Bay State is behind only Minnesota in female-friendliness.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Thousands of New Englanders participated in a Boston Women's March on Jan. 20, 2018. GETTY IMAGES

March is Women's History Month, and though times have changed, there's still a lot of work to be done when it comes to women's rights — as evidenced, clearly, by the women's marches and #MeToo movements that have been spreading around the country.

Women in the United States are still fighting for equal wages and reproductive rights, as well as working their way into politics and business-ownership, but is there anywhere that's really female-friendly?

Massachusetts is the second-best state for women, according to a report from personal-finance site WalletHub.

To see how women fare around the country, WalletHub looked at two factors for all 50 states: women's economic and social well-being, and women's health and safety.

In the first category, the study included information on median earnings for women (adjusted to each state's cost of living), the female unemployment rate, the percent of women-owned businesses and more.

For health and safety, stats on the number of uninsured women, women's life expectancy at birth and female homicide rates were included.

Massachusetts ranked second overall, coming behind Minnesota as the overall "best" state for women.

When it came to economic factors, Massachusetts made it to the top 10 for a few reasons. The Bay State ranked eighth for lowest overall unemployment among women (at 3.3 percent), eighth in terms of the female high school graduation rate (which is 90.8 percent) and ninth for the lowest share of women in poverty (at 12.5 percent).

But Massachusetts is in the middle of the pack when it comes to women-owned businesses, coming in at No. 28 (Alaska has the highest percentage of women-owned businesses.)

As for health and safety, Massachusetts — known as a hub in the medical world — excelled. It took the No. 1 spot for having both the lowest percent of uninsured women and the best preventative health care, which factored in what percentage of the female population were up-to-date on things like cervical and breast cancer screenings.

Massachusetts also ranked in the top five for women's life expectancy at birth.

Politically, Massachusetts is a blue state, and that may have contributed to its high score. The study found blue states more female-friendly, with an average rank of 15 of all 50 states, while red states averaged a rank of 33.

Louisiana — the 11th-most Republican state in the country, according to poll-analysis site FiveThirtyEight — ranked as the worst state for women in this report.

What to drink at the Boston Beer and Cheese Fest

Famous duos: Peanut butter and jelly, pie and ice cream, beer and cheese.

SHIRLEY WANG
letters@metro.us

Drink Craft Beer will host its third annual Boston Beer and Cheese Fest on March 9, featuring a dozen cheese connoisseur and 25 breweries from all over the east coast.

Jeff Wharton and Devon Regan, founders of Drink Craft Beer, organize the company's events in their free time while continuing their day jobs. At this event, cheesemakers meet hops-experts and collaborate on wash-rind cheeses. Vendors swap stories, tips and praise for each other's taprooms.

"There's probably a literal ton of cheese, there's tons of charcuteries," Wharton says. "You can't really go wrong."

With new venues opening up and many moving on, the lineup always seems to be changing each year. Here are a few breweries you should check out at this weekend's Beer and Cheese fest.

Shacksbury
Shacksbury is known for its one-time-only cider creations. During last year's NYC Cider Week, they teamed up with the Momofuku Ssäm Bar, an East Village speciality restaurant that serves Korean-style a la carte meals with slow-roasted meats wrapped in lettuce leaves. At the festival, it'll bring its cider-throwing barrel, which shoots the drink 3-4 feet before landing in your cup to properly aerate the apple flavor. shacksbury.com

Far From the Tree
Cider-makers Alex and Denise bought an apple orchard last summer in Acton that helped to save over 240 acres of land from commercial development. They will be bringing their Ciderac, a sazerac-inspired drink with rye whiskey, absinthe and bitters. farfromthetreecider.com

Riverwalk Brewing Co.
Riverwalk opened its taproom in Newburyport last fall, with plans to add an outdoor biergarten in the summer. Since, it's been hosting live music events, exhibits from local artists and movie marathons. It'll debut the latest edition of its High Water American Pale Ale series, High Waters #5. riverwalkbrewing.com

Fill up on beer and cheese this weekend. DRINK CRAFT BEER

If you go

March 9-10, The Cyclorama, 539 Tremont St., $60, drinkcraftbeer.com

Shaidzon
After Proclamation Ale Co. left its facility in West Kingston, this brewery from Rhode Island moved right in and started fermenting. In case you were wondering, "shaidzon" is a made-up word meaning "shades on," coined by co-owner Chip Samson. Sample the also oddly-named Buffalo Czech, a pilsner, or the Big Crüe, a saison recommended by Samson. shaidzonbeer.com

Sixpoint
Beer aficionados are familiar with waiting in lines for hours for a brewery's new releases, but Sixpoint founder Shane Welch's initiative will change that all; his app lets fans purchase cans ahead of time instead of walking up to the location. No need to use that for the Festival, however, as Sixpoint will be sharing High Res, its triple IPA, and Sweet Action, a hoppy golden ale. sixpoint.com

Mindy's newest project

Kaling's sitcom drops this week —and you're gonna wanna watch.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

Anders Holm, Andy Favreau and J.J Totah NBC

Mindy Kaling's been working up a storm (thank God), and Thursday her latest project hits the small screen.

"Champions" revolves around Vince (Anders Homs), a charismatic gym owner whose life as a bachelor is turned upside down when his high-school fling Priya (Kaling) drops off their gay teenage son Michael (J.J. Totah) to live with him and pursue his Broadway dreams.

But while Kaling only has a supporting role in the show, she's still heavily involved as its co-creator and writer, and her influence and comedic imprint is all over it.

Metro spoke with her co-creator, Charlie Grandy, to get the lowdown on "Champions."

Where did this seemingly bizarre story come from?

I've been working with Mindy for a long time, on five projects, and she said to me, "I have this rough idea about a half-Indian gay teenager moving from Cleveland to New York to pursue his Broadway dreams. Does that sound interesting to you?" And immediately I said, "Yeah." I have to admit I would have said yes whatever, because it was Mindy. But that idea specifically felt very timely and interesting.

Timely why?

Mindy and I have been working now for a combined total of 40 years. So we were like, "Who is a fun character that we haven't seen on TV?" Someone with a strong point of view, a really hot take and someone who would always be on their phone. This was a young, fun energy to write for. And wouldn't be cowed by all the forces in the world that he goes up against. We didn't reverse-engineer it. We didn't ask, "What's going to be zeitgeisty?" It was about what's going, interesting and compelling.

Did you feel a responsibility to explore certain topics?

Your only responsibility as a comedy is to be funny. We don't want to be preachy or lecture. But when you stumble across something that's interesting, juicy and topical you want to then represent both sides, both comedically and intelligently. You just want to handle these topics in the right way.

Let's talk Anders Holm.

Anders sets the tone — he's a leader on set. He's always on, but not in an annoying way. He himself is an incredible writer, so her understands structure and jokes, and gets it from that point of view. When we first talked to Anders he was concerned about the details of the character — what he wanted, what was his deal. Rather than it being about how he was funny.

Why are sitcoms still relevant?

They're easy to digest. The storytelling in sitcoms has learned a lot from drama over the last 10 years. It's not just funny, but compelling, too. We just want it to feel like a familiar, great place to hang out in. That's the tone of a network sitcom. You never want television to feel like homework. Sometimes it does, though.

Your homework? Watch "Champions" on Thursday, March 8, at 9:30pm on NBC.

Feeling anxious? Rest a little easier knowing that the jitters may help your memory. ISTOCK

Here's one surprising benefit of having anxiety

wellbeing

A study suggests highly anxious people may have a more vivid capacity for recalling emotional experiences.

KATE MOONEY
kate.mooney@metro.us

If you've ever suffered from anxiety, you know how overpowering the feeling of dread and nervousness can be—it's sometimes so bad you can't concentrate on anything else. But according to a study in the journal Brain Sciences, the intensity of anxiety may make your memories more vivid.

"It gives you a heightened sense of awareness and makes you attuned to details you wouldn't be otherwise," co-author Myra Fernandes, professor of psychology at the University of Waterloo in Canada, told Time.

That's to a point, of course. When anxiety levels get too high, they can become debilitating and can even cast an overly negative and emotional tint to an experience.

For the study, researchers asked 80 undergrad psychology students (excluding those who had been diagnosed with clinical anxiety) to complete a questionnaire describing their daily experience with anxiety. They were then categorized by the intensity of their symptoms, with one group deemed "low anxiety" and the other "high anxiety."

Each group was shown a set of words overlaid onto images, some negative and some positive. They were later asked to recall the words from memory. While both groups were able to remember roughly the same number of words, the high anxiety group had better recall of the selection paired with negative images.

This suggests that the emotional context of an experience may help imprint it onto memory. But again, that association could also lead to a distorted, overly negative view of a past event. This probably rings a bell for anyone who's been accused of seeing the worst in a situation.

"Thinking about emotional events ... might put you in a negative mind-set that can bias you or change the way you perceive your current environment," said Christopher Lee, a psychology Ph.D. candidate at Waterloo.

He concluded that it's important to "be aware of what biases you might bring to the table" and "how that might ultimately shape what we walk away seeing."

Dash diet may lower risk of depression

The Dash diet may be designed to treat hypertension, but according to a study by the American Academy of Neurology, it may also fight symptoms of depression.

Researchers from Rush University Medical Center in Chicago evaluated 964 participants, average age 81, every year over a period of six-and-a-half years.

Eating a diet high in veggies, fruit, whole grains and lean protein is good for your heart and your head. ISTOCK

The subjects were divided into three groups, two of which closely followed the Dash (that stands for dietary approaches to stop hypertension) diet — a well-balanced meal plan of mostly fruits, veggies, lean meats, whole grains and low-fat dairy — and a third, which adhered to a more Western diet —high in saturated fats and red meat. Based on subjects' answers to questionnaires about diet and wellbeing, researchers determined the first two groups were 11 percent less likely to suffer from depression the third group.

"Depression is common in older adults and more frequent in people with memory problems, vascular risk factors such as high blood pressure or high cholesterol, or people who have had a stroke," said study author Laurel Cherian, M.D. "Making a lifestyle change ... is often preferred over taking medications, so we wanted to see if diet could be an effective way to reduce the risk of depression."

Cherian concluded that "future studies are now needed to confirm these results."

It would certainly be helpful to see if the Dash diet could be effective in staving off depression among a younger poulation. KATE MOONEY

Bruins need to be cautious

The Bruins can afford to give some of their top stars ample time to rest down the stretch.

RICH SLATE

Patrice Bergeron is currently nursing a broken foot. GETTY IMAGES

The Bruins (40-15-8) have established themselves as one of the top teams not only in the Eastern Conference but in the entire NHL. As such, they don't have to worry about just making the playoffs (of course, seeding and matchups always matter) but rather being able to field their strongest club when the real action starts in mid-April.

Boston began its season-high six-game homestand in fine shape last week with three straight wins, including two in overtime, but the injury bug has bitten them hard. One-of-a-kind center Patrice Bergeron (27 goals, 27 assists, plus-26) is out with a broken right foot while goaltender Tuukka Rask (26-11-4, 2.27 goals against average, .919 save percentage and two shutouts) was a late scratch for Saturday's thrilling 2-1 overtime victory over hapless Montreal with a "minor lower-body injury."

Even more worrisome is that rookie star defenseman Charlie McAvoy (seven goals, 25 assists, plus-26) left after one shift against the Canadiens and didn't return with a lower-body injury.

The payoff for having such a fantastic regular season up to this point for the Bruins, though, is that they can afford to be extra cautious with the health of this very vital trio of players.

Stepping up

Anton Khudobin (14-4-4, 2.34 goals against average, .921 save percentage and 1 shutout) has been Boston's best backup goaltender in years, proved once again by another top-notch performance against the Canadiens (sweeping the season series against their most heated rival for the first time since 1994-95) where he made 27 saves and was named the No. 2 star of the game. Winger Rick Nash (2 goals, 1 assist in 4 games with the Bruins) was the headliner of the trade deadline for the B's but the afterthought players that they picked up have already paid immediate dividends as well. Center Tommy Wingels has a goal and assist in two games, right wing Brian Gionta has three assists in two games, and defenseman Nick Holden has two assists in two games. It's unlikely that they keep up that kind of production for long, but Bruins GM Don Sweeney was smart to add these reliable veterans to the mix.

The combined number of points injured Bruins stars Patrice Bergeron and Charlie McAvoy have registered in the 2017-18 NHL season.

Expect to see Khudobin back between the pipes on Tuesday (7, NESN) at TD Garden when the Bruins host the Red Wings (26-29-10).

"Tuukka is nursing a minor injury, we'll keep an eye on that one," said Cassidy after practice on Monday. "Not having skated now for three days, it doesn't look like he'll be able to go tomorrow. He probably wants to get in a little work before he goes back in the net."

Meanwhile, McAvoy has already been declared out by Cassidy and he was seen at Team Picture Day wearing a knee brace.

The game of the week for the Bruins is on Thursday (7, NESN) when they host the Flyers (34-21-11) - who have been one of the NHL's hottest teams for weeks. Philadelphia could be a possible postseason opponent for Boston.

The homestand wraps up on Saturday afternoon (1, NESN) when the surprisingly rebuilding Blackhawks (28-30-8) kick off the rare home-and-home on back-to-back days with a Western Conference team.

‘HOME ALONE,’ HATING PATS

One would have thought that the Patriots hate would have died down a tad after Super Bowl LII, because, ya know, the Pats lost.

But leave it to a forgotten child movie star to drop the hate hammer.

During the Academy Awards Sunday night, right after the Best Original Score was announced, Macaulay Culkin tweeted, “Actually, the best original score of the year was New England 33 – Philadelphia 41.”

Ouch! Burned by friggin’ Kevin from “Home Alone.”

Is it worse to be burned by someone relevant or someone irrelevant?

I suppose this is some level of payback for all the Atlanta Falcons 28-3 jokes made by Pats fans last year.

THE OTHER JIMMY G.

One of the NFL’s great debates five years ago was, “Who is better – Jimmy Graham or Rob Gronkowski?”

Soon enough, the two could be teammates with the Patriots.

“The play-calling and [former offensive coordinator] Darrell Bevell is the issue [in Seattle],” Pro Football Talk’s Chris Simms said. “They never found a way to creatively install him or make him part of the offense. It was, ‘Oh, OK, we got in the red zone. We’ll throw a jump-ball to you. There just wasn’t the ways we saw that Sean Payton utilized him … I would say watch out for the New England Patriots, who like tight ends that are big and can run down the middle of the field.”

The idea of pairing Graham with Gronkowski is obviously enticing. But if the Pats do wind up signing Graham in free agency – it could serve more as Gronk insurance than anything.

When Martellus Bennett was hot during the 2016 season, there were whispers that the Patriots were getting ready to pay Bennett instead of Gronk. In fact, during November of 2016, TheMMQB’s Albert Breer said he thought the Pats would trade Gronkowski “down the line.”

“No matter how you look at it, [Gronkowski is high maintenance,” Breer said at the time, well before all the recent Gronk retirement drama. “It’s fair to say that he’s a high maintenance player. Now what we’ve seen from the Patriots in the past – with high maintenance players they’ll put up with it while they’re still productive at the highest level. Eventually there comes a point where doing all of that work to keep him healthy and breaking all the rules that you have for everybody else to keep him on board – eventually a guy’s production doesn’t match what it takes to do all of that … Down the line, [Gronkowski] may be the surprise trade guy.”

Aries Delve into private matters to find a way to justify what is going on and the best way to handle the fallout. Knowledge will be the tool to help offset a mistake.

Taurus Open up to a partner to develop a better rapport that will encourage greater opportunities both personally and professionally. Romance will improve a relationship.

Gemini Offering help to one of your peers will ensure that you get something in return when you need it. If you make your motives clear, you won't be disappointed.

Cancer Personal changes should be welcome. Physical, mental and spiritual alterations will result in more confidence and will encourage you to share your feelings and intentions.

Leo Find a practical plan and get moving. Use your imagination, not your credit card, to come up with a viable solution that won't incur debt.

Virgo Learn about anyone you are planning to team up with before you make a commitment. Whether the relationship is personal or professional, a background check is advisable.

Libra Use what you know or do well in applying for a job or providing a service that will bring in extra cash. An energetic, positive attitude will improve your prospects.

Scorpio You'll be sensitive, and it could result in tension between you and a co-worker. Adjust to whatever situation you face to avoid falling behind.

Sagittarius Your generous spirit will be welcomed by those needing help, but before you step in, consider if you are being taken for granted and set some boundaries.

Capricorn Add a little finesse to whatever job you are given. Use your imagination and incorporate a unique twist to an old idea. Hard work will bring you closer to a lifelong goal.

Aquarius You'll be tempted to take on too much, causing you to fall short. If you commit to the offers or ideas that make the most sense, you will prosper.

Pisces Don't wait for someone else to take the reins. Stand up and be counted. You have plenty to gain if you are willing to take a chance on a promising venture. EUGENIA LAST
